You know, I get myself into trouble in email, so I try to bury myself in absence forms and The Sacred All-Hallowed [So Holy that the Adjectives in the Title are Redundant] Employee Manual, but...

1. I read the paragraph that so offends Dr. T. And I read it again. And again. And, well, Dr. R. simply does not do what Dr. T. claims.
2. Dr. R's reference to "World War II elders" logically follows her earlier reference to "old-timers." There is nothing confusing about this.
3. Dr. R's quoting Berger is unmistakably clear. IMHO, one must do some serious contorting to think she's saying Berger is a WWII elder and/or that his quote is about the NEA, et. al.
4. Hint: the key word in the sentence is "like". (It helps that that's also the first word!) It suggests a comparison is coming. And, lo, one does! WOW!!! Like "A", "B" is [quote about "A"] according to [author of work about "A"]. There's nothing confusing about this at all. In the words of the title of a famous video used by homosexual activists to indoctrinate children in schools into a philosophy their parents reject just like the Nazis used to do, It's Elementary!
5. It seems the heart of Dr. T's accusation is that Dr. R. "misleads readers via combining her views with serious scholarship." Selah. OK, now ask yourself if an author who "combines her views with serious scholarship" in an opinion piece (um, you know, like, where she's expressing her views) is trying to mislead you or merely to convince you of her thesis when she combines her views with serious scholarship. I'm thinking that Dr. T. tried to accuse Dr. R. of twisting the research to back up her opinion. Alas, but that's not what he said. He said she "misleads" and that she does so "via combining her views with serious scholarship."

Maybe Dr. T. does not actually believe that an opinion piece misleads when it combines an author's views with serious scholarship, but he writes so poorly here that one can't be sure. Personally, I reject Dr. T's apparent thesis that an opinion/commentary misleads when it combines an author's views with serious scholarship. I'm not sure it's even possible to mislead "via combining an author's views with serious scholarship." I actually think it's a good idea to write opinion columns (and blogs too!) that back up an author's views with serious scholarship. But, hey, that's just me. Dr. R. should get an award for doing so ... except that she was just doing what everybody always does and adhering to the barest minimum of her own very high standards just like she always does. Maybe that deserves an award these days.

Hey -- speaking of the barest minimum standards, maybe my wife will give me an award when I get home: it's 10:30 a.m. and I have not once committed adultery yet today! How thrilled she'll be if I refrain from adultery all day long!!

Gotta go... I hear the Employee Manual calling...

Don't click send... don't click send... don't do it, George... Nooooooooooooo

The passage in Judith's article that deals with the scrubbing libraries clean of all materials that undermined Nazi orthodoxy reminded me of an article I wrote and one I cited about the de facto censorship that takes place right now in community and school libraries:

Just in case you didn't see the original here it is.

Had I the time to do the research, clearly the Komsomol youth in USSR schools would have had the same anti-parent, anti-religion, pro revolutionary training.

Best, Judith

WorldNetDaily column compares GLSEN to Hitler's youth

Posted: 01 Apr 2009 07:02 PM PDT

Well, that headline probably got your attention. Judith Reisman in a WorldNetDaily column today compared the two groups primarily because they both involve youth. In fact, the comparison, such that it is, ends there.

Naturally, GLSEN is none too happy being compared to Nazis. They issued a press release earlier today.

NEW YORK, April 1, 2009 – In a commentary called “GLSEN and the Hitler Youth,” World Net Daily columnist Judith Reisman today compared Day of Silence participants, GLSEN and students who participate in Gay-Straight Alliance student clubs to Hitler Youth. The column was featured on the wnd.com front page.

“Last week at our Lobby Day in Washington , DC , I saw students aglow with joy after having the opportunity to speak directly with their elected representatives and take part in our democratic processes,” said GLSEN Executive Director Eliza Byard. “Today I read a commentary comparing those young people, as well as me and my staff, to Nazis. We can only hope this is some sort of sick April Fool’s joke.”

Reading the commentary, it does not seem like Reisman means for the reader to chuckle. Reisman makes sweeping unsubstantiated statements like this:

Under color of a ‘Safe Schools Movement’ battling alleged ‘bullying’ of so-called ‘gay’ children (K-12), some see GLSEN as a modern version of the Hitler Youth and as preparing the ground for a larger, sweeping, schoolroom Youth Brigade.

Who are the “some?” She no doubt does but writes in an indirect fashion, as if the outrageous connections should be clear to the informed reader. Reisman also misleads readers via combining her views with serious scholarship. Here she quotes Ronald Berger but makes it seem as though he is a WWII elder who is troubled by the NEA and that he assesses the NEA and GLSEN as being comparable groups to the Nazi's National Socialist Teachers Association.

The similarities between Hitler's National Socialist Teachers Association (NSTA) and the Rockefeller and Playboy funded National Education Association (NEA) and American Library Association (ALA) troubles some World War II elders. Like Hitler's NSTA, our NEA also largely guides the "ideological indoctrination of teachers." (Ronald J. Berger "Fathoming the Holocaust," Aldine Transaction, 2002, p. 50) Moreover, NSTA, the NEA, GLSEN and the Hitler Youth all seek to sever schoolchildren from their parent's religious and sexual training.

I checked the Berger reference. His quote there is referring to the NSTA and not NEA or GLSEN. Reisman makes it seem that Berger said the NEA indoctrinates teachers in a manner similar to the Nazi group. I have no love for the NEA but this is not an honest approach to commentary.

I was surprised by one thing: she did not reference Scott Lively's Pink Swastika once. But with this op-ed, she may have out done him.
